

and economics. The boy decided to follow his other father's advice and as a result he became extremely rich

It was a great book and completely opened my eyes to the world of passive income and property investing. It was quite ironic because I had recently left working for my dad and was now looking for a mentor. My new mentor spent hours talking to me about my dreams and he believed in me. He himself had recently been on a property investment course with Simon Zutshi and encouraged me to do the same. It turned out that Simon also used to be a magician but had quit and was running a very successful property investment business

I loved the idea of property investing. I'd built up £6,000 worth of savings from delivering around 42,000 newspapers over a four year period while a schoolboy. I asked my mentor what I should do next and he responded

”.Educate yourself“

This was probably the best advice I have ever received. I could have spent the £6,000 towards buying a house, but instead I spent the whole amount and more on educating myself. I attended some courses that were useless and others that were outstanding. Simon Zutshi was extremely generous and helpful and I certainly wouldn't be where I am today if it wasn't for him. I went along to a Property Investors Network which Simon was running in Birmingham. All my other friends were just starting college and here I was mingling with these middle-aged property investors. Afterwards, I had a good chat with Simon and he was very helpful, but more importantly, he believed in me. A short time later, Simon called me to ask how things were going. I told him that I had no money and was too young to even get a mortgage, so despite being extremely excited about property, it was probably just a pipe dream

Simon told me straight that this business was for anybody and spent 45 minutes giving me encouragement over the phone. Today, Simon and I are
