

would total £700 per month just for a roof over their head. The other option would be to move into a fully furnished room with no hassle, with all their bills paid, for a total of around £350 per month

Some tenants may prefer to live alone and pay a lot more, but a very large percentage would jump at the opportunity to save more money and have the hassle-free houseshare

.For these reasons, finding housemates was easy

En suites are poo (2

When looking at some of my competition offered from other landlords I saw some really bad rooms. The thing that really surprised me was that many of them didn't even have an en suite so tenants were expected to share a bathroom, sometimes even between four people. I then remembered what ,Chris the builder had said

Unless you want scumbags in your house, you absolutely need en suites in“
”.all the bedrooms

Although some of my rooms were small and awkwardly shaped, I was proud that they were all en suite. I began to notice that prospective tenants were not paying any attention to the en suites or asking about them before viewings. They would be more interested in the speed of the wifi, the nearest bus stops and whether the bedding was included. I slowly came to realise that many housemates were not as bothered as I thought about en
