

suites. I did a survey with over 600 tenants and some of the results I found
.were astonishing

On average, a housemate will pay only an additional £35 per month to have .an en suite

Guess how much they would pay extra to have super-fast wifi? Also about
.£35 per month

To find a house with space for en suites in every bedroom you will pay more for the house. Then to have them fitted you will probably pay another £8,000 easily. Yet your extra rent would be the same if you just paid £25 per ?month for super-fast broadband. Interesting isn't it

En suites are not bad, but are massively overrated. I have found that .housemates will usually happily share one bathroom between four people

Centre sells, rural smells (3

I showed a 22-year-old lady from France around a property. She had just moved to Birmingham to start a new job and had contacted me about my rooms. I met with her at the property and she spent less than ten minutes looking around, said she loved it but had two more places to see and would
.call me later that day

I naively waited for her phone call which, of course, never came. The following day, I decided to call her and find out why she hadn't chosen my house as I was determined to learn all about my customers' needs and do my market research. She told me that it was a little too far out from town.
She had decided to move to a room that was more expensive but much closer to the centre. It turned out to be a place called Lozells. I was shocked! Lozells is very close to the centre but is infamous for its bad reputation and high crime rate and the houses are much cheaper to buy there
