You don't need a refurbishment (5

The first house I bought was also an HMO. It was located very close to the one I had been managing. I didn't bother with en suites; neither did I bother with a renovation. This property was just over two storeys so I didn't need a license and it had three bedrooms and two reception rooms. When a property has two reception rooms, I translate that as one reception room and one bedroom. Of course, when converting a reception room to a bedroom, !you need to have your builder out, right? Wrong

In order to convert a reception room to a bedroom, you need to put a bed in it! It really is that simple. All that needed doing was small cosmetic work. No builders, no knocking back to the brick, no en suites, just me and my !mum

My mum and I cleaned it, painted it and had it ready as a multi-let within two weeks and it cost less than £2,000. I then rented it out the rooms for the same price as the previous landlord's house that I had rented out, and within
