

changes for the negative you will always find another rule
.changing for the good to make a loophole

If you are a lower-rate tax payer, this will most likely not affect .2
.you at all

If you have HMO properties and stick to my formula of 'buy low, .3 rent high' you have very little to worry about. The reason for this is because the mortgage payments are so low, not being able to claim them as tax deductible is not really a big deal. It may lose you a few pounds each month but the people who will feel it most are high rate tax payers with high mortgage payments and the rent
.is just covering it

The new changes will push rents up. As many landlords will be .4 forced to pay more tax, the obvious thing to happen is they will put their rent up to compensate. This will lead to rents being
