

strange LOA contract is nearly impossible. However, if you leave it with .them to speak to a solicitor here is what will happen

Firstly, they will respect you and trust you even more for not selling and for doing things properly. Then they will contact the solicitor. Please note that this needs to be a solicitor who you know doesn't mind being contacted and .who specialises in LOAs and wants the business

Then what will happen is the solicitor will do all the selling. They will put the homeowner's mind at rest and answer all their questions. The solicitor is a credible third party who has no axe to grind, but, of course, the solicitor
.will give the homeowner peace of mind to go ahead

Sign the dotted line

Jeremy emailed me again to say he had thought about it long and hard and had spoken with the solicitor who was extremely helpful. He was interested !in proceeding. Bingo

If I had got the order of these events wrong or had tried to answer his !questions and sell to him, I would have lost the deal

I then sent over a one-page agreement that explained and outlined the LOA arrangement. We both signed it for clarification purposes and sent it to the solicitors. The solicitors then drew up a legally binding contract which we .both signed. I was then ready to collect the keys

Jeremy has managed to walk away from his property that was causing him stress with more money and less hassle than could have been achieved in .any other way

I have a property that is renting out for £550 per month from day one, generating a profit of over £4,000 per year and I am benefiting from all the