

move forward, or maybe they see two at the same time and are only in a .position to buy one

?So, how do you network with landlords

There are many possible options, but I would recommend joining a proper network and making friends with like-minded investors. In networking, you reap what you sow. In other words, if you expect things from others before giving anything of value first, you're a bad networker. The key is to always be thinking about how you can add value. One of the things that I personally do is visit landlords' associations and property networks to speak and share my story. Once I have spoken for an hour and given them lots of value and informed them of new and current strategies, they will be delighted to help me. This has resulted in me receiving lots of unwanted deals along with many other perks and, of course, gaining a great reputation .in the property world

Estate agents

The first person a motivated seller will usually call is an estate agent. Being friends with agents is extremely beneficial to your business and will win you many incredible deals. I have agents who will call me before they even have the keys to a property because they know it ' s a cracking house and I will buy it. The best way to make friends with estate agents is to buy from .them. Once you have bought one or two, they will treat you like royalty

The best ways to network with estate agents is to physically go into their branch if they have one and talk to them. Let them qualify you for a mortgage even though you will be using your own broker, because it shows them you are financially qualified and gives you chance to build rapport with them. Be up front and honest, but never be a know-it-all and listen to
