

me or who are doing better than I am. However, when you are starting out
.this is absolutely vital

A friend of mine called Jas read up about property investing. He searched Google and read a couple of books before going out and buying his first property. Jas didn't really know what he was doing but was excited and keen to make some passive income. He bought the wrong property, in the wrong area, for the wrong price. To make things worse, the tenants who moved in were criminals and the house ended up being attacked and burned down. Poor Jas had not bargained for this and had a terrible power team around him who were not able to prevent this from happening. Today, Jas has educated himself and has surrounded himself with a proper power team and things are very different. However, if Jas had done this in the beginning
.he would have saved hours of time and thousands of pounds

Melissa had read about Lease Option Agreements and had found a No Money Down Deal. Just days before taking it on, she fortunately came along to one of the Property Investors Crash Course I run and realised that her contract was incorrectly drawn up, even by the solicitor! This could have lost her the deal or she could have ended up with a court case on her
.hands

Property investing is easy but only when you know what you are doing. You can either pay for your mistakes or for your training; one weighs tons and the other ounces. My advice would be to talk to others who are already
