

Acknowledgments

Our Collective Gratitude

Thank you to our Frugal Friends Community for widening our circle of listeners beyond Jill's mom and helping us understand the true value of relationships; what can be discovered, refined, and achieved when we invite each other in. This book represents our collective ideas, and it's our love letter back to you.

To Goldie Gumban, our manager of everything. If it was your face we could put on this cover just to show our appreciation, we probably would have! We're still not sure quite where you came from, but we are glad you've stuck around. From keeping the Frugal Friends business afloat while we disappeared to write this thing, to helping us in the final hours to cite our sources, you're the MVP and we could sing your praises for dayz.

To our triple threat, behind-the-scenes dream team: our agent, Heather Jackson, who took a chance on us, believed in this book, and guided us expertly through the world of traditional publishing. Our editor, Emma Effinger, who has understood our message from the start and has been a consistent, calm encourager toward the finish line. And our copyeditor, Leda Scheintaub, for tightening this thing up and making our voices sound better than they ever did on the podcast.

To Paige Pritchard, Allison Baggerly, Haley Brown-Woods, and Joshua Becker—your insight, expertise, and experience shared in these pages are