

“might” use simply because it’s a good deal is a trick retailers are playing on you. Getting a deal is no longer a badge of honor. It’s carefully played marketing. You know what’s smart now? Only purchasing what you truly love and value, even if it’s full price.

If you’re wondering, the two companies that did not use deceptive pricing 100 percent of the time were Costco and Apple (who held no sales during the survey period).

Lightning Round

Which of the five reasons for impulse spending resonated with you most?

Action Step

Revisit your 90-day transaction inventory and identify in what ways you see your “survival” brain overpowering your “logical” brain, causing you to impulse spend. It may be helpful to duplicate your spreadsheet and sort alphabetically by where the purchase was made. That way you can more easily see how often you’re spending at each place. You can see an example of this in the video walkthrough on the resources page for this book at frugalfriendspodcast.com/book.
