

out of corporate life—taking your fair share but no more—you'll be part of a unique group that can say they've met the challenge and moved on to lusher fields, a group that will have taken advantage of a possibility that only the richest, most varied country in the world can provide.

This book tells how you can do it now. If you follow the formula, it could be the best thing that ever happened to you.

STRESS KILLS

All Peat Marwick partners are required to have an annual physical exam. I used to have my annual physical every three years. When I went in for the physical in early 1984, the doctor didn't know of my plans to retire.

As I recall, the doctor looked up from the illegible notes he had made during the exam and said, "You're in great shape, Paul. Everything's normal."

I frowned and tilted my head. "Everything? With all the stress in my job? All the traveling I do? All the salt in my diet? Additives? Red dye number two?"

He looked back at my file, then shrugged. "You could lose a couple of pounds. Five, maybe."

I observed his beefy frame, easily thirty pounds overweight. I decided against a wisecrack. It was my physical, not his.

I said, "Heartbeat okay? Vital signs strong? Blood pressure normal? I eat a lot of salt."

"Within the normal range."

"So my job hasn't affected my health at all?"

The doctor looked at me patiently and shook his head. "Not at all." Then, trying to be helpful, he smiled and said, "Wait a couple of years."

My doctor knows. My wife knows. Every New York City cabdriver knows. Every money-driven lawyer, IBM salesman, and art dealer knows. Life in the fast lane can be dangerous to your health. Tennis and golf, hiking and skiing,
