

him $300. In New England we met a young couple who retired and restored an old house in Maine. They run it as an inn during the summer and live in the Caribbean the rest of the year. Similarly, we met a woman who runs a catering business in Cape Cod during the summer season. She makes enough to live in Boston the rest of the year. Other young retirees we know lead tourist groups once or twice a year. For those who speak a second language, leading tourist groups pays well and includes a free trip abroad.

Perhaps the quickest way to make money is to do temp work. In 1986 Time reported that the professional temp business is booming. "In growing numbers, lawyers, doctors, engineers, computer experts, and college professors willing to punch in and out for up to $150 an hour are being snapped up by firms and institutions eager for their services but only for a while. Professionals now account for an estimated 11 percent of the 800,000 Americans who work each day in temporary positions." Tax specialists help out during tax season. Lawyers do discovery work to help prepare major cases. Doctors cover emergency rooms during holidays and weekends. Computer programmers hire out on a per-project basis.

Retired young teachers can work summers or do substitute teaching. Retired young writers can do three or four magazine pieces a year. Retired secretaries can fill in for regulars who have babies. And anyone, it seems, can garden, paint houses, or teach English to foreigners.

Another part-time task you should consider is making your money work harder. One-year CDs minimize risk and require little attention. I recommend them. But if you're willing to live with some risk and spend time on your investments, you can adopt the high-risk/low-risk investment program in chapter 10.

Remember that to make your stash earn higher returns, you almost always risk more and work harder. A friend of mine puts 20 percent of his retirement funds into limited partnerships that buy oil reserves. The risk? The price of oil may
