

You like to live in a large home? Great. You can house-sit, move to the Third World, or live with others in a rambling farm house. You can decide to live in a smaller place that has some of the features you associate with a big house. For example, I like big, well-lit rooms. It's not so much the size of my house but the size of the room I'm in that affects my state of being. So Vicki and I bought an apartment with a large living room and high ceilings. The living room looks out onto a patio that doubles our sense of space. Large windows let in light, and we installed fluorescent lamps in the ceiling to add even more. The result is a large, pleasant living area that accommodates parties of six, gives me a sense of space, and keeps us from feeling cramped.

You love to travel? On $743 a month you can move to a new country every year. That eliminates airfare and hotels, the two biggest travel costs. Tired of moving? Travel to low-cost countries. To study the Hapsburgs, go to Budapest rather than Vienna. To learn French, go to one of the former French colonies rather than Paris. Visit Hong Kong or Singapore rather than Tokyo, the Dominican Republic rather than Barbados, and Yugoslavia rather than Italy. And travel off-season, when you get better airfares and cheaper hotels. Drop into Rio during Carnaval and you'll spend a fortune. Go the month before or the month after, and you'll never be able to spend $743.

You like to go to expensive restaurants? Why? If it's the food, you can learn to do gourmet cooking at home. When you're retired you'll have plenty of time, and you can get others to share the fun with you. If it's the service, you can hire a teenager to come over and serve. If it's the ambience, you can search for out-of-the-way little places that offer the atmosphere without the cost.

You have a tough time living without financial security—like me? You can work on it. Try yoga, TM, or other Eastern meditation to help you transcend the physical. Read Thoreau and try to think more clearly about life's basics. Spend time
