

With a “do it now” attitude these questions don’t come up, because the answer’s always the same: “I enjoy it. It’s fun. I’m growing.”

When you enter the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, the sign says: PAY WHAT YOU WISH, BUT YOU MUST PAY SOMETHING. When you retire, the rule is:

Do what you wish but you must do something

The idea is to live, not to dissipate time. With a to-do list and a little imagination you’ll soon be just as short on time as you are now. But with a difference. You’ll be doing exactly what you want to do, when you want to do it. Your time—and your life—will be your own, all day long, every day of the year.

You’ll never get the feeling that life is passing you by. It’s not!

Here’s a recap of this chapter’s rules:

Make a to-do list

Remember that work was just talking on the phone

Go for responsible pleasure

Modify the work ethic

Live without guilt

Do what you wish but you must do something

To decide what to do when you retire, just follow the rules. Within a few months you’ll look at people who go to the office every day and wonder why they do it.
