

purpose and mission, and it becomes a driving force that directs future actions.

Brad

I “found” the FI framework of saving money long before I knew the formal concepts of achieving financial independence. It was a combination of many things that led me to stress saving money.

During a summer job in college, I was shown a compound interest retirement calculator. It blew my mind and changed my life forever.

I started my first job at Arthur Andersen in 2001, the “best” accounting firm in the world at the time. Due to the Enron scandal, the firm didn’t exist nine months later.

I saw the partners at my accounting firm working seventy-hour work weeks and wasting their lives away in an office. That wasn’t how I wanted my life to turn out.

I realized that if I stayed on the “standard” path, I would be lucky to get ten calendar days off in a row for the next forty years.