

you're comfortable never seeing again. That's right: Even if your brother insists it's a loan, treat it like a gift. Never expect to see money you loan friends or family again, and it will divorce emotion from that transaction and preempt any toxic resentment that may result if your brother doesn't pay you back. Best news is, you never have to do this again. Next time your brother asks, tell him you already gave him money. That was very generous and will suffice.

Reviving Ghost Money

Earlier in the book, I asked you to calculate your 90-Day Number. Now I'm going to ask you to go to my website, www.kevinoleary.com, and find the Ghost Money calculator. The calculator is a tool that will show you how much Ghost Money your unconscious spending and lending have created, with the added bonus of the compounded interest that the money would have earned had it been properly deployed as an investment. Put in the items you've regularly spent money on in the last five to ten years, or however long you've been problematically, automatically spending on incidentals. Be honest and realistic. What you'll be calculating is your own Ghost Money fund, and figuring out how much you can resuscitate now, with just a few adjustments to your incidental spending habits. Here are a few ideas to stanch the flow of your Ghost Money.

1. Magazines. Never buy them off the rack. Rack prices are inflated, so it's the most expensive way to get your fix. Always subscribe, or get a tablet and download them. Local libraries let you read them for free. And if you work in an industry where it's important to stay abreast of news and current affairs, convince your boss to buy the magazines for you. Besides, chopping trees down for magazines and newspapers is going to become an obsolete practice. We live in an increasingly wireless, paperless world. Embrace it.