

You are never too young to start being smart with your money. You're not in any debt—yet—unlike your parents. They're scrambling to make up for past mistakes, while you've got nothing but time on your side.

Being a teen is tough. I know; I've been there. Your less-savvy friends might blow their cash on the latest and greatest purchase—whatever that may be (and believe me: it's never the same from one week to the next). Don't make the same mistakes as them. I wish someone had told me how to be smart with my money, even when none of my friends were being smart with theirs. Sure, I've achieved the freedom that comes with having money. But I would have achieved that freedom a lot sooner if someone had shared with me what I'm about to share with you.

Yours truly,

Uncle Kevin
