

7. Choose the best, and learn the lessons. Choose wisely the people you want to intern for, because they could be your mentors and colleagues for a very long time. Over the summer, a major retail chain decided it was not going to sell one of my products. Ramin took the call and listened to a long list of reasons for their decision. When he diligently reported their reasons to me, I picked up the phone and called the retailer back myself. I told them they were out of their minds. I listed reason after reason why they were making a huge mistake. Guess what? Within five minutes, they reversed their decision. What did Ramin have to say about this? “The biggest lesson I learned during my internship was this: in any business, nothing is set in stone!”
