

Money Mistake: You're in a Rush to Start Your Business

The Fix: Do Your Research and Make a Quality Product

“Google is one of my best friends,” says Elaine. “Before I launched Easy Daysies, I logged a ton of time online, making sure there were no other magnetized visual routines on the market. If you have a great idea, the first thing you have to do is make sure it’s not already out there. Some people tell me, ‘I don’t have time for that.’ Believe me: the research is the easy part! It gets a lot crazier down the line.”

Because Easy Daysies is the only product of its kind, it is filling a massive market niche: Elaine’s visual routines are sold in over 600 stores across Canada, and have just launched nationwide at Staples in Canada and Barnes & Noble in the U.S.

This is Linda and me with George in Geneva, Switzerland, where he lives. George is an avid wine collector and is extremely knowledgeable in the Swiss varietals. We sample different styles when we get together, looking for ideas to use in our O’Leary Wines brand.