

3. The No Niece. If it's the Positive Partner's job to say yes, then it's the No Niece's job to say no. And no, it doesn't necessarily have to be a niece ... but you get the idea. Think of the No Niece as the opposite of a yes man. It's her job to always be realistic and even cynical, challenging the Bosshole to make sure every business decision is the best one that can be made. If something's not going to work, it is the No Niece's job to point it out, potentially saving the business (and the dynasty) from financial ruin.
4. The Numbers Nephew. Again, it doesn't have to be a male and doesn't have to be a nephew, but this individual will be your chief financial officer, even if the title is unofficial. He's fantastic with numbers and he knows everything about the company; he goes to sleep thinking about numbers at night and wakes up thinking about them in the morning. When it comes to crunching figures and keeping your bottom line healthy, his mind works more quickly than everyone else's, which is why you need him around. Whenever you need information, the Numbers Nephew has it at his fingertips.
5. The Wunderkind. Think of the most competent manager you've ever seen, and then multiply by five. This is the Wunderkind. She's not an assistant. She doesn't only manage your time, she protects it. She's got her finger on the pulse of the company, which means she's a wiz at human resources. The Wunderkind can juggle 20 different meeting requests and somehow, all due to her fine management skills, you will never miss a single appointment and will always arrive flawlessly prepared for your meetings. She makes sure that deadlines are met, employees are satisfied and clients are happy.
