

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many thanks to my collaborator Bree Barton and senior editor Nita Pronovost, who helped me write this book. Thanks also to Doubleday Canada, in particular Brad Martin, Kristin Cochrane and Josh Glover, and to my agent Mel Berger for being the best in the biz. I want to thank my father, George, who meticulously scrutinizes my written work, always for the better.

I started my journey decades ago with my wife, Linda. At our wedding reception, we could only afford pizza for our guests. She is pragmatic about money because we started with none. Much of the advice in this book about family financial matters comes from my experience watching her run our family. What she did worked.

Finally, I want to thank my children, Savannah and Trevor. I learn much from them. The world today is a very challenging place for young people. Watching them deal with the problems thrown at them as they make their transition into adulthood provided me with a treasure trove of inspiration for this book.