

1.1

What is Consulting?

Consulting is essentially about providing expert guidance and advice to organisations with the aim of enhancing their performance or resolving specific challenges they face.

Consider a scenario where a struggling retail chain is experiencing declining sales and inefficient operations. In this situation, a consulting firm might be brought in to assess the company’s current state, identify areas for improvement, and recommend strategies for growth.

For Instance

Let’s make our supply chain work better.

One consultant might focus on analysing the company’s supply chain and operations to identify inefficiencies and bottlenecks.

We can make our brand more attractive.

Another consultant might specialise in marketing and branding, suggesting ways to enhance the company’s visibility and attract more customers.

Let’s find ways to save money and make more.

Meanwhile, a financial consultant might delve into the company’s financial data to uncover opportunities for cost reduction and revenue optimisation.

