

Handling Exit Strategies and Transitioning Out of Engagements

Should you decide to terminate a consulting engagement, handling the exit strategy and transition process with care and professionalism is crucial. Here are some best practices:

Communicate transparently

Inform the client of your decision to terminate the engagement, providing clear and objective reasons for your decision. Avoid assigning blame or burning bridges, as professional relationships and reputations are valuable assets.

Avoid assigning blame or burning bridges, as professional relationships and reputations are valuable assets.

Develop a transition plan

Work closely with the client to develop a comprehensive transition plan, outlining the steps and timelines for transferring knowledge, deliverables, and responsibilities. Ensure a smooth handover to minimise disruptions and maintain continuity.

Fulfill contractual obligations

Review and adhere to any contractual obligations, such as notice periods, non-disclosure agreements, or intellectual property rights. Seek legal counsel if necessary to ensure compliance and mitigate potential disputes.

