

Directly competing with these large, well-established players as a new entrant is extremely challenging unless you have a truly differentiated value proposition, such as deep expertise in an emerging domain or disruptive technology. These firms have built up collective experience over decades, employing vast teams of consultants and leveraging extensive resources and methodologies.

For most new consulting ventures, the boutique consulting segment is a more viable entry point, which serves projects below the ten crore mark. Boutique firms often specialise in specific industries, technologies, or functional areas, allowing them to provide highly specialised expertise that larger generalist firms may lack.

Boutique firms often specialise in specific:

Industry

Technology

Functional Areas

Many boutique consulting firms are started by individuals or small teams breaking away from larger consulting companies or industry Players. These founders can leverage their professional networks and reputations to acquire initial clients, circumventing the challenges of building a brand and clientele from scratch.

For Example

When the Goods and Services Tax (GST) was introduced in India, numerous boutique firms sprang up to help businesses with this complex new regulation, even competing with larger players who initially lacked specific GST expertise.
