

Consider the following aspects during your self-assessment:

Educational Background

Evaluate the relevance and depth of your academic credentials, including degrees, certifications, and specialised training, to your consulting niche and service offerings.

Professional Experience

Assess the breadth and depth of your professional experience, including the industries you've worked in, the roles you've held, and the specific challenges you've encountered and overcome.

Technical and Functional Expertise

Identify the specific technical or functional areas in which you and your team members possess exceptional knowledge and expertise, such as data analytics, project management, process optimisation, or regulatory compliance.

Soft Skills and Interpersonal Abilities

Consider your strengths in communication, problem-solving, critical thinking, leadership, and client relationship management, as these skills are essential for successful consulting engagements.

Industry Connections and Networks

Evaluate the strength and reach of your professional networks and industry connections, as these can be powerful differentiators regarding access to opportunities, insights, and resources.