

8

Identify Opportunities and Threats

Based on the internal and external analyses, identify key opportunities and threats facing the company:

- Opportunities (e.g., new markets, product innovations, strategic partnerships)
- Threats (e.g., disruptive technologies, changing customer preferences, intensifying competition)

9

Develop Recommendations

Come up with ideas on what the company is good at to take advantage of opportunities outside the company. At the same time, find ways to deal with weaknesses and problems outside that could cause trouble,

- Operational improvements or process optimisations
- Product innovations or portfolio rationalisation
- Market expansion or diversification strategies
- Organisational restructuring or capability-building initiatives

10

Implement and Monitor

Assist the client in implementing the recommended strategies and establish mechanisms to monitor their effectiveness, track internal and external environment changes, and make necessary adjustments.

The Internal vs External Analysis framework provides a comprehensive and structured approach to assessing a company's overall business situation, considering both internal factors and external market dynamics. By systematically evaluating these dimensions, consultants can develop tailored strategies that align a company's internal capabilities with external opportunities while addressing potential threats and weaknesses.