

4

Shared Values

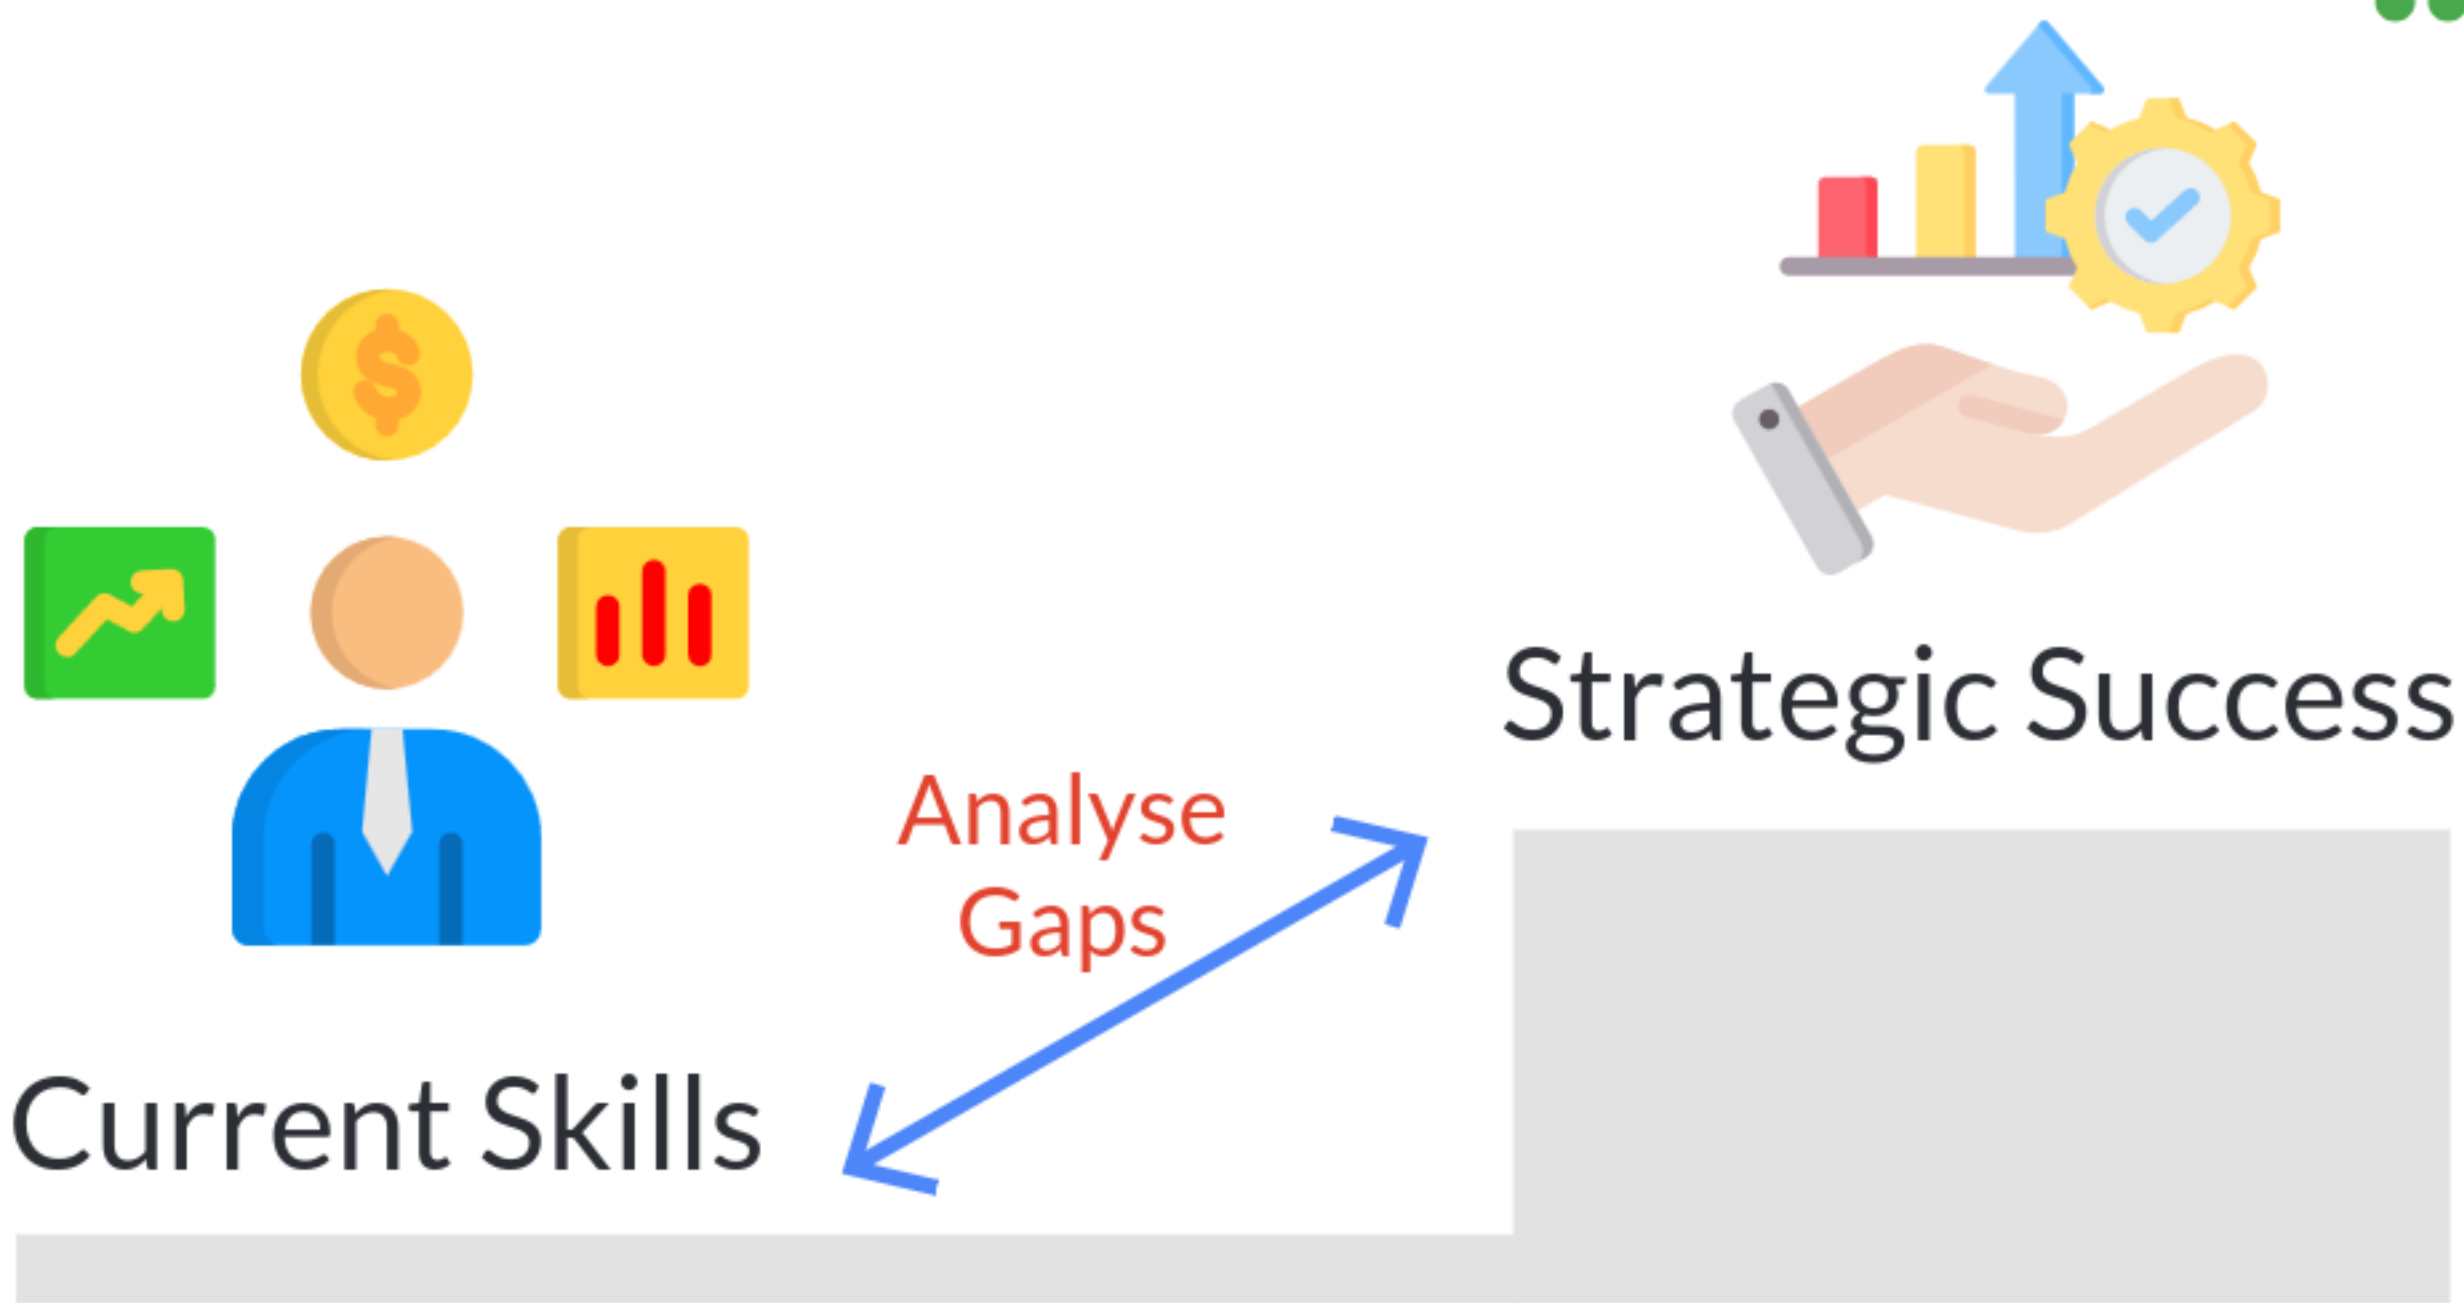

The values, beliefs, and behaviours essentially form the organisation’s culture. We assess the alignment of these cultural attributes with the strategic requirements. For example, an innovation-centric strategy may struggle in a risk-averse culture that discourages experimentation.

5

Skills

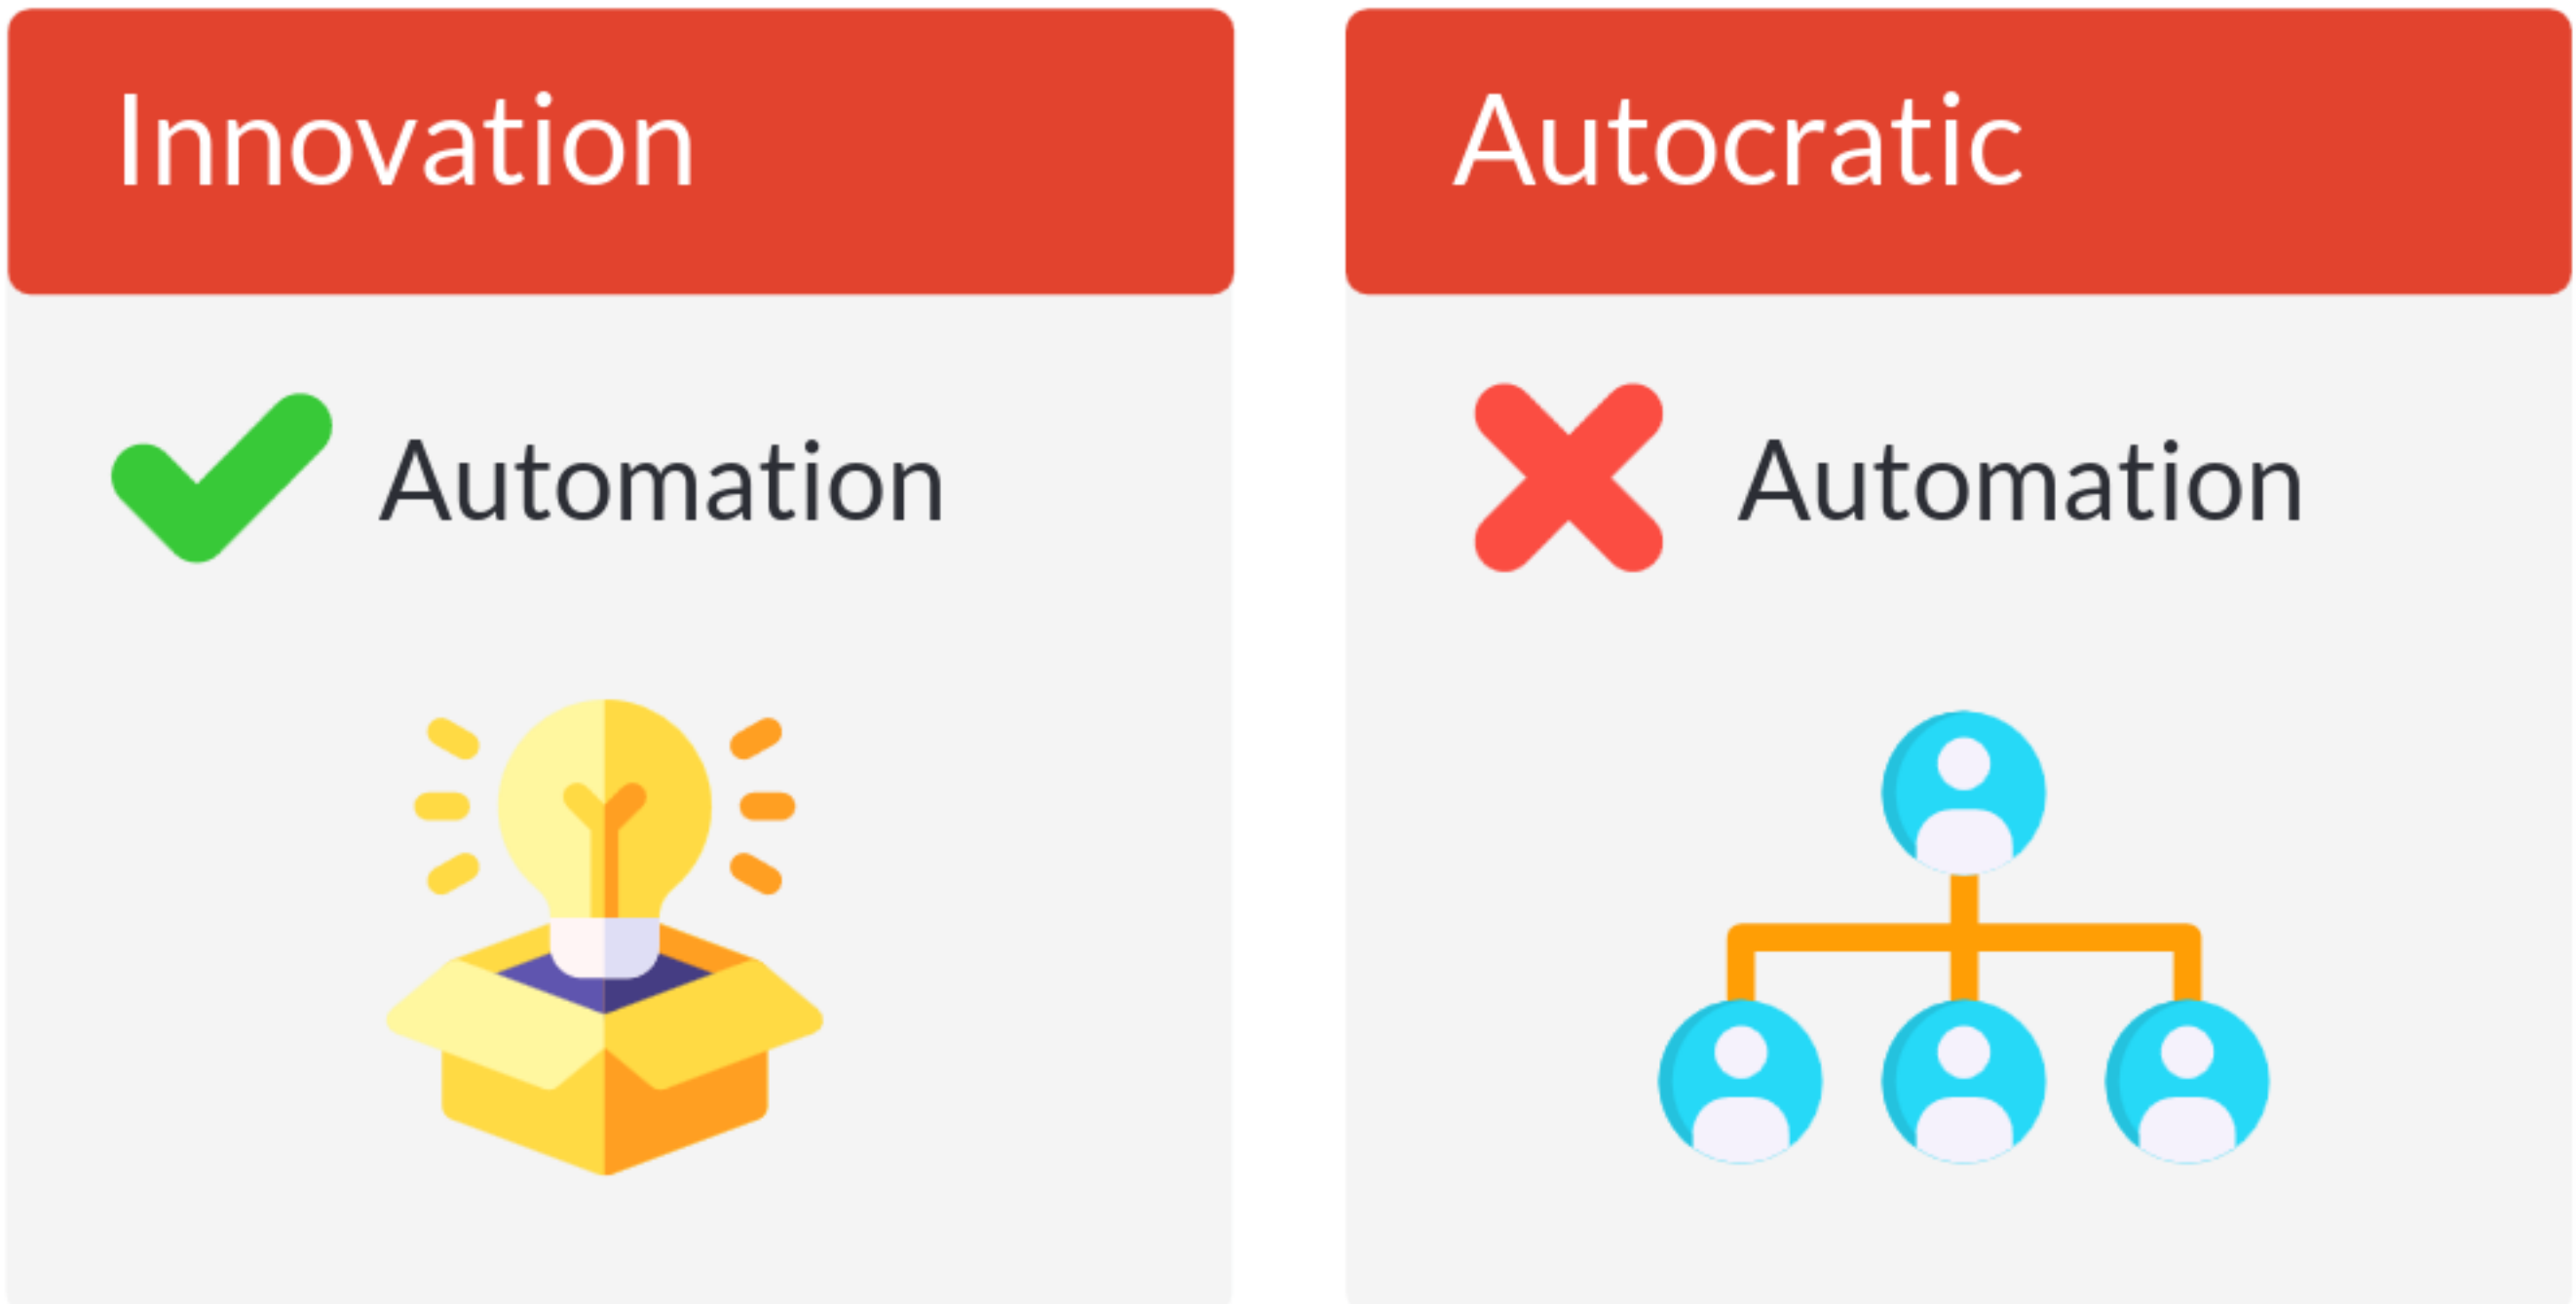

This dimension focuses on the organisation’s workforce’s skills, competencies and human capital. We analyse gaps between the skills required for strategic success and the current capabilities, highlighting training and talent management needs.

6

Style

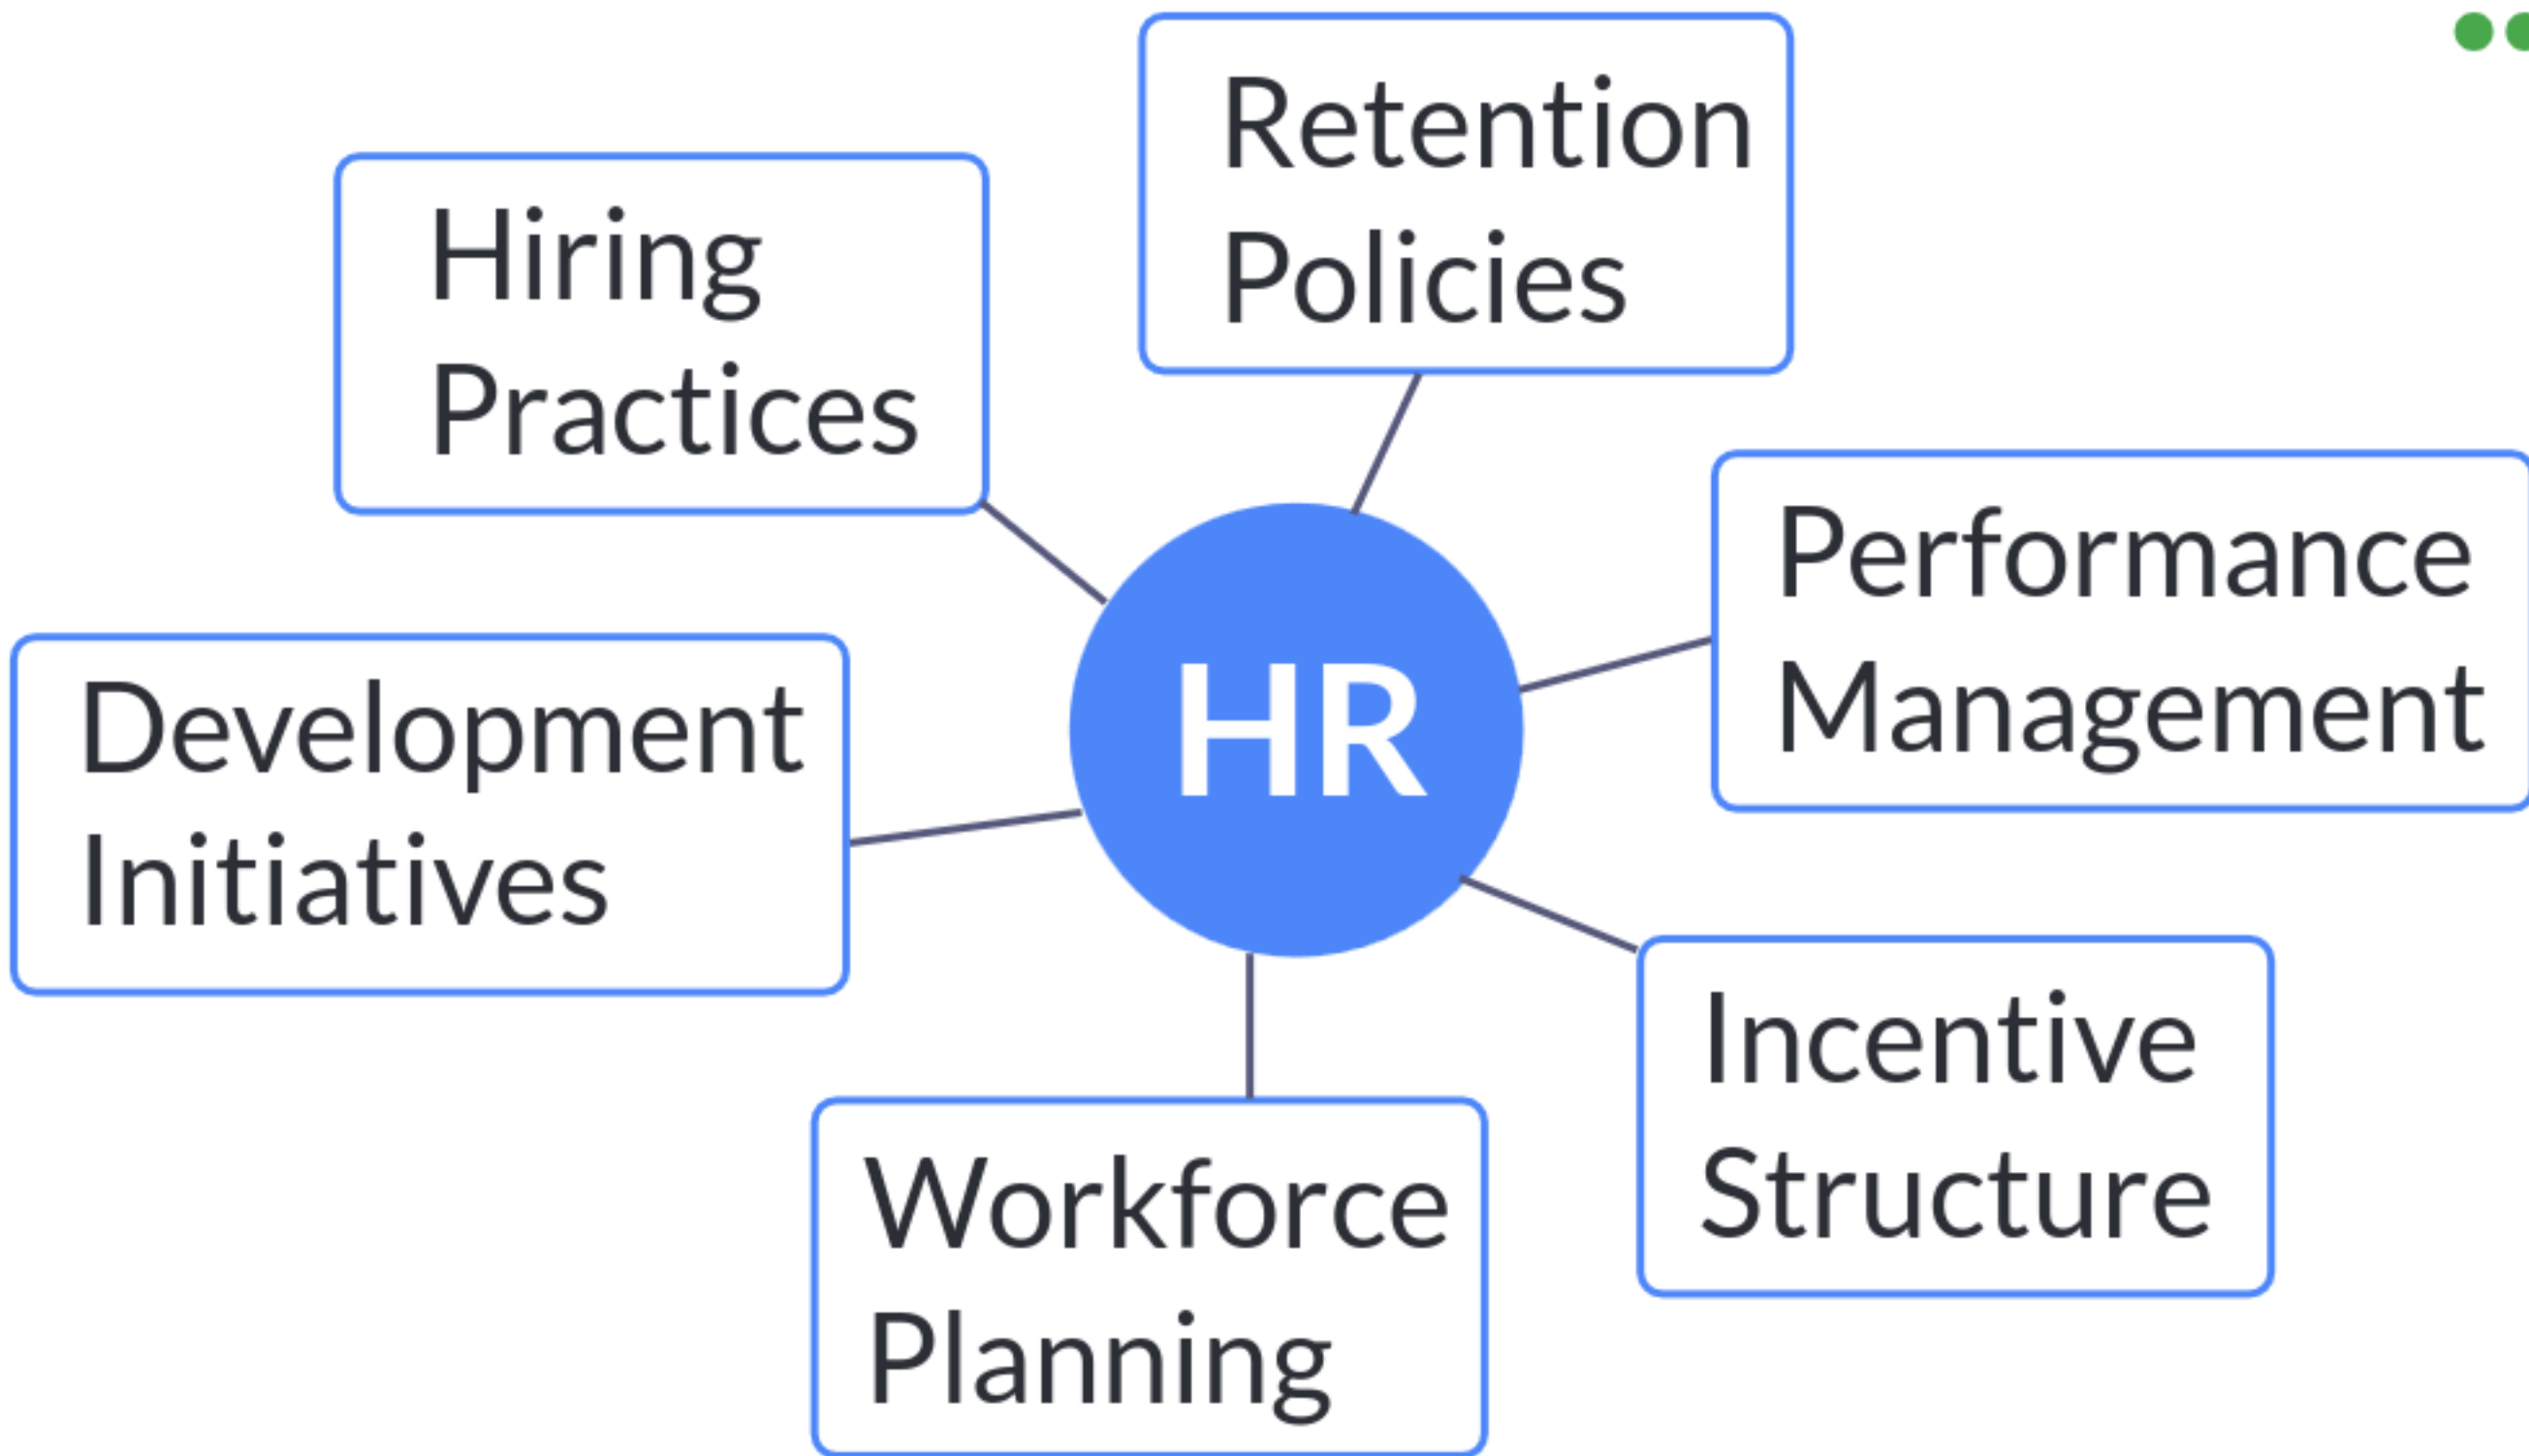

The leadership style prevalent in the organisation, including decision-making approaches, communication patterns, delegation policies, etc. An autocratic, centralised style may not be suitable for an entrepreneurial, innovative strategy requiring autonomy.

7

Staff

This covers all aspects of human resources - hiring practices, retention policies, performance management, incentive structures, workforce planning and development initiatives. We examine their effectiveness in acquiring, nurturing and motivating the right talent.

By systematically evaluating these elements and their interdependencies, consultants can identify areas of alignment or misalignment with the organisation’s strategic direction.