

In early February 1995, price broke out of its congestion zone and zoomed higher. From that point on, there was no looking back.

Price continued rising in an almost straight-line bead until April 1996. Then, after setting a new high (80.38), price backtracked. Expecting a retrace in an uptrend, Peter held onto his shares. “I watched the shares sink, and when they reached 72, I threw up my hands and sold. And you know what happened next? The sucker dipped to 69.95 before rising again. Turns out I sold the blasted thing too soon.”

Still, he made $30 a share or 71% in about 2 years.
