

10% after the breakout, having 24% or 31% bust is alarming. Of course, price has to close opposite on the side of the breakout direction to bust a pattern (meaning a busted upward breakout sees price close below the bottom of the scallop).

Busted occurrence. Sorting the type of bust into one of three bins sees single busts happening most often. A single busted pattern is also where you'll get the best performance in the new direction.

Busted and non-busted performance. The table shows single busted patterns outperforming. Unfortunately, I haven't found a way to predict that a chart pattern will single bust. If you can figure it out, then you can make some money trading single busted patterns. Even if you can't figure it out, the single bust rate ranges from 57% to 78%, so the odds are on your side.
