

“I lost some sleep worrying about the upward retrace in March, and thought the party was over. But I stuck with it.”

The stock eventually pierced support and kept moving down. “I hoped that the congestion region in March was the corrective phase of a measured move down. That would place the target at 22.50, well below my target of 27.13. I'm not stupid, and I'm not greedy, so I left the target where it was.”

On April 18, a ringing phone woke him. His broker reported that they covered the short at his target price. He made about $12 a share. That put a smile on his face, and he went back to his dream of telling his boss what he could do with the night shift.
