

You can't use the APR to compare home-equity lines of credit and home-equity loans. The APR for a line of credit doesn't include points and fees, so it will be misleadingly low if you try to compare it to the APR for a home-equity loan.

Should You Get Your Loan Online?

Even if you're not comfortable with the idea of handling the entire mortgage process online, don't hesitate to use the Internet to research rates and fees being offered by various lenders. Lenders who offer the most competitive rates tend to be online. You may not want to complete the lengthy loan application form online, but you can call the lender and give the information over the telephone. You may be able to track the progress of your loan online. At the very least, you can use the Internet to educate yourself quickly and painlessly about various mortgage products and current rates.

Where can I find the best mortgage interest rates and costs?

Research or apply for mortgage loans online at E-Loan (www.eloan.com), LendingTree (www.lendingtree.com), Bankrate.com (www.bankrate.com), or REALTOR.com (www.realtor.com).
