

CHAPTER 18

Retirement: Planning for Tomorrow

You're never too young to start investing for retirement. Compounding of earnings is so powerful that if you start investing in your twenties, you can amass a large nest egg with little effort by the time you are in your sixties or seventies. All that's required is a basic understanding of retirement plans and the commitment to start now.