

It is best to try to divide the investments among the least interconnected assets. For example, if you are going to invest $10,000 into five different investments, try to choose U.S. large cap, commodities, international large cap, real estate, and maybe fixed income. Get paid while you wait to realize appreciation on your investments by investing in those companies that reward you with dividends, frequently at a tax-advantaged rate.

Dollar cost averaging (DCA) is a technique that includes buying a fixed dollar amount of an investment on a habitual basis, regardless of the share price. In general, fewer shares are bought when prices are high and more shares are bought when prices are low.

No one really knows if or when it is safe to jump back into the market. No one is going to call you and say, “Now is the right time!” You have to be confident in your investments. If you don’t follow at least some of this advice, and instead, depend solely on your emotions to determine when it is right to make an investment, it is likely that by the time you start feeling safe about getting back in the game, you won’t be able to keep pace with the market. For your own benefit, try to keep emotions out of your investments, and stick to a well-disciplined strategy.
