

Sometimes one of the other boys would come home for the weekend. Occasionally, the girls would be able to help out, too. And sometimes—such as Thanksgiving weekend—we had the whole family outside—pruning, clipping, digging, raking, nailing.

It is a great thing when you can get the children to help. There's nothing quiet or tranquil about it. The noise of chainsaws and old diesel tractors. Hammering. Sawing. Clipping. Sweating. Swearing.

Working together as a family is probably the best way to build a family and to hold onto family wealth.

Notes

- 1. Craig Whitlock, “Mubarak Steps Down; Egypt Exults,” Washington Post, Feb. 12, 2011.
- 2. Spencer Ackerman, “CIA: Our Mideast Forecasts Kind of Suck,” Wired Danger Room (blog), Feb. 10, 2011.
- 3. William S. Leavitt, “Cyber Security,” The Gloom, Boom & Doom Report (Mark Faber, ed.), February 2011.
- 4. Andrew Higgins, “In Sendai, Long Lines of Quiet Desperation,” Washington Post, March 15, 2011.