

over as mixers from your last party. A glass of tonic water before bed can help you relax into your sleep.

8. Cultivate happiness

Whatever makes you happy, do it (unless grisly murders make you grin—then consider your unhappiness a sacrifice for society's sake). Why? Because happiness has a strong correlation to health. No one seems to know quite why this is so, but studies show over and over that it is.

9. Relax your jaw

Sort of like your hamstrings, your jaw is connected to lots of other parts of your body, though it particularly influences the muscles in your neck and shoulders. Relax the jaw and the tongue (make sure it's lying on the bottom of your mouth and not pressed up against the top), and feel the muscles in your neck and shoulders let down. Apparently it's so effective, they're encouraging pregnant women to do it while in labor!

10. Avoid pollution as much as possible

Most pollution is toxic. It's made up of things that are bad for your body. Even if it doesn't cause cancer or something else life-threatening, a cough, a sneeze, or a runny nose all get in your way. It's true that you often don't know when you're around a pollutant if it's not bothering you, but avoiding the ones you do know about is a great place to start. Look for improved respiration, circulation, and happier eyes and nasal passages.

As they say in Ireland, "May you live a long life, full of gladness and health, with a pocket full of gold as the least of your wealth."

— Sarah Winfrey

5 Tips on Toilet Paper Usage

Is there a strategy for using toilet paper? Is it worth our time? When I spend money to literally flush the product down the drain, I often wonder . . . how much should I be flushing? Am I wasting money?

