

cellular plan. Verizon and XYZ might have a deal that extends discounts to employees' families. You punch in your (or your spouse's or your kid's) work-issued email address to see if you qualify. You'll get a response detailing the discounts for which you are qualified. You can get as much as 25% off under certain agreements.

Just to clear up any confusion, we're talking about your personal cellular account! Yes, your personal account that you signed up for outside of your company. That's the beauty of the discount. These discounts have always been available, but not a lot of people know about them. Bad marketing on their part means when you tell your friends this trick, you can feel all smart and savvy.

Check for your discounts now by visiting the websites listed below. It just takes a few seconds, and with a potential 25% off discount, there's no reason not to go do it now!

AT&T:

wireless.att.com/business/
authenticate

Verizon:

verizonwireless.com/discount
-program

T-Mobile:

validate.t-mobile.com/employee
-discount

Sprint :

sprint.com/landings/verify /index.html — Greg Go

10 Things I Never Buy New

I don't like buying new. It's not that I consider myself to be some kind of Scrooge. I just have a hard time paying more for something than I need to, and often we take that extra hit when we pay for a brand-new item. So, I buy secondhand things a lot of the time. Here's my guide to the main items you should always consider buying used.

DVDs/CDs

Why bother paying $21.99 for a new DVD or $14.99 for a new CD, when you can pick up a barely used copy of the same title for at least half the price? The improvements in modern DVD and CD players also mean that scratches and smudges don't really matter—the technology can deal with them. It's the best way to get your home entertainment. Even places like Amazon.com offer avenues to get the titles used. No more excuses; stop buying new DVDs and CDs.