

find a nice gift bag for the waxy present and pass it forward. However, you'll need to be creative, very creative, with any of the following, so beware: books that have no tie to the person you're giving them to; CDs or DVDs that are equally random, obscure, or awful; clothing without the tags; shoes, or sneakers (unless they're spot-on for both size and style); useless appliances (come on, who really wants a Clapper?). If you feel a little uncomfortable or guilty about regifting any item, it's probably best not to do it. Of course, if you really don't like the person you're giving it to, but have to give a gift (like those Secret Santa deals), I'll look the other way as you pass on a crappy DVD with a random autobiography taped to it.

7. If it's used, it usually doesn't count as a gift.

Sorry, but a sweater you've only worn a few times is not a regifter, even if you do have all the tags and the original gift box. Same goes for all other clothing, most appliances, anything, in fact, that you can get actual "mileage" out of. Gift cards are also included here. It doesn't matter if you only used $5 of a $30 card—that's just tacky. However, I say "usually" because there are some exceptions to this rule. If it's meant purely for display, like a photo frame, candlestick, painting, or something in that same vein, you can "usually" get away with it. Make sure you give it a quick dusting first, though, as that's a dead giveaway. Of course, if that person saw the item on display in your home, you're in a whole heap of awkwardness.

8. Don't wait too long to regift.

Time may be a great healer, but it doesn't really do the regifter any favors. The older the brand-new item becomes, the more obvious it becomes that this is a regift. If you can no longer find the product in the stores, if the packaging has been updated, or if the company that made it went out of business ages ago, you're stuck with that item. By all means, try to sell it or give it to charity, but as a regift it stinks of "Here's an old thing I found in my basement, but hey, it's never been used!"

9. If you can't regift, there's always Craigslist.org or eBay.com.

The web has opened up a world of choices to regifters. Now, if an item does go beyond its "regift date" or has been gently used, there's the option of the free classified ads on Craigslist.org, or the wider reach of eBay.com.
