

In some instances the item you have for sale could now be a collector's item and you could get back more money for it than it was originally worth. This is also a great way to attack the idea of regifting if you're just against it in principle. Simply sell an unwanted gift to raise money for a brand-new gift for that special someone in your life. You're happy, they're happy, and the person who originally gave you that gift . . . well, what they don't know won't hurt them, right?

10. Replace old, ripped, or scuffed gift wrap.

This is obvious. Don't try to regift with the same wrapping paper, even if you were careful with opening it in the first place. And if there's a gift card with your name on it, well, do I need to say more?

To sum up, regifting is a great way to pass on a gift if you're watching your budget or want to see an unwanted gift go to someone who could genuinely use it. And as my mum and dad always told me, it's the thought that counts anyway. As long as it's done with someone else in mind, I don't see the harm. Better to do that than throw it away or mindlessly chuck it in the spring-cleaning bag for Goodwill. — Paul Michael

