

11 Penny-Pinching Ways to Pimp Your Garage

When you open your garage door, does it look more like the room of doom than a place to park your car? Are holiday decorations taking up the corner where you can only dream of a humble workbench? It's time to put your garage back into good use. Here are 11 frugal garage-pimping tips.

1. Ceiling racks

These are a huge help and perfect for those items you only access seasonally, such as holiday decorations. They come in a variety of styles and save your wall space for those items you need access to on a more frequent basis.

2. Peg board

Available for cheap at your local home hardware store, this stuff is easily attached to wall studs, and can be loaded with hooks to keep your handy items in plain sight. Want to make sure the tools get placed back in the right place? Trace hammers and other tools in black marker exactly where they hang on the peg board. The outline will serve as a reminder to return the tool to its precisely allocated spot.

3. Wall organizers

Wire baskets, wall hanging units, and vertical bike racks all come to mind here. Basically, you just want all the precision storage you can get for those tougher-to-streamline storage categories.

4. Rolling industrial shelves

Industrial shelving is particularly well suited to the garage because of the abuse that anything in that room
