

10. Power shopping for the man's man

Stocking a garage or workshop for home use can easily cost a small fortune. But by using simple power-shopping strategies and demonstrating a little patience, you can have what you need for much less. Cruise moving and estate sales, as well as flea markets and store models for things like shop vacuums, generators, snowblowers, air compressors, and more. It might take a bit longer, but so does saving up for the full-price version.

11. Customized drawer liners

I know we're focusing on the frugal alternatives for garage pimping, but if you do have a set or two of rolling tool cabinets (and they can be affordable from time to time), consider custom-cutting holes in a foam liner to keep expensive precision items in place and protected. This also serves the same purpose as outlining items on the peg board. You can also use the rubberized rolls of kitchen shelf lining material. It's affordable and ideal for those shallow drawers of items you don't want to have rolling around.

— Myscha Theriault

