3. Tell me what you know about this company.

Do your homework before you go to any interview. Whether it's being the VP of Marketing or the mailroom clerk, you should know about the company or business you're going to work for. Has this company been in the news lately? Who are the people in the company you should know about? Do the background work; it will make you stand out as someone who comes prepared, and is genuinely interested in the company and the job.

.....

4. Why do you want to work here?

This should be directly related to question 3. Any research you've done on the company should have led you to the conclusion that you'd want to work there. After all, you're at the interview; right? Put some thought into this answer before you have your interview; mention your career goals and highlight forward-thinking goals and career plans. Talk about the aspects and achievements of the company that you admire.

5. What relevant experience do you have?

.....

Hopefully, if you're applying for this position, you have bags of related experience, and if that's the case you should mention it all. But if you're switching careers or trying something a little different, your experience may initially not look like it's matching up. That's when you need a little honest creativity to match the experiences required with the ones you have. People skills are people skills, after all; you just need to show how customer service skills can apply to internal management positions, and so on.

6. If your previous coworkers were here, what would they say about you?

Okay, this is not the time for full disclosure. If some people from your past are going to say you're a boring a-hole, you don't need to bring that up. Stay positive, always, and maybe have a few specific quotes in mind. "They'd say I was a hard worker" or even better, "John Doe has always said I was the most reliable, creative problem solver he'd ever met."

.....

7. Have you done anything to further your experience?

.....

This could include anything from night classes to hobbies and sports. If it's related, it's worth mentioning. Obviously anything to do with further education is great, but maybe you're spending time on a home improvement project to work on skills such
