

DealNews

(dealnews.com)—The staff at dealnews do the very hard work of scouring the web every day for only the best deals on the hottest items. Users can be assured that every deal has been verified and the retailers are reputable (they ban any store with a history of poor customer service). Unlike many other deals sites, their site is easy to navigate and use, which is a godsend for any dealhound trying to get in and out quickly so they can catch the deal they want.

DealsOfAmerica

(dealsofamerica.com)—Presenting only hand-picked bargains, the staff is committed to providing every resource to help shoppers save money. They understand the uncertain credibility of many unknown online retailers, so they try to search bargains from big online retailers or stores with nationwide presence, so shoppers can feel safe and secure with their purchases.

DealsPlus

(dealspl.us)—A site that uses the power of social media to determine the best deals to feature. Members submit and vote for the best deals. You can be sure that only deals with member consensus show up on the homepage. Along with coupons, store specials, and freebies, you can search for the circulars from any store that has one—an extremely useful feature to prepare for seasonal sales like Black Friday.

DealTaker

(dealtaker.com)—A deals site that doesn't just focus on tech bargains. Find discounts for clothes, toys, jewelry, and more. Their simple design makes the forums easy to navigate—no small favor for the rookie deal hound.

Ebates

(ebates.com)—A site that gives you money back for shopping. Most coupon and deals sites make money through commission. Ebates does, too, but they like to pass some of that back to you—the actual shopper. What better bargain can you get than that?

FreeShipping

(freeshipping.org)—One of the few drawbacks of online shopping—and the bane of a bargain hunter's existence—is to have a great deal spoiled by a shipping charge. FreeShipping saves the day by providing free shipping codes for over 4,000 online merchants.

Apex Deals

(apexdeals.com)—Not only do they have the latest deals on all the hot computers and accessories, they also have hardware and software reviews, how-to tutorials, and the latest industry news. It is a one-stop shop for computer fanatics.

GottaDEAL

(gottadeal.com)—A very well-rounded site that offers deals for a variety of items (as opposed to mainly tech-focused). Their annual coverage of Black Friday deals is truly spectacular and an essential destination for any bargain shopper.

Hey, It's Free!

(heyitsfree.net)—Run by a team of eccentric characters, HIF lists only the best freebies on the web. Who doesn't love getting something for nothing?

MyGroceryDeals

(mygrocerydeals.com)—An extensive site that provides a comprehensive listing of the grocery deals in your area. The site allows you to enter your grocery shopping list or recipe ingredients, add the best local deals to your shopping list, and finally print and save about 35% off groceries! so you'll get a customized list of only the most relevant items for you and your family.

Online-Sweepstakes

(online-sweepstakes.com)—Lists thousands of available sweepstakes and contests with an easy to navigate design, useful sorting options, and a robust forums community. They also offer a premium membership which allows access to exclusive listings and tools that make entering easier and winning more likely.

PriceGrabber

(pricegrabber.com)—An extremely popular site, and for good reason. This place has it all: a
