

Gretchen Rubin

(gretchenrubin.com)—Can money buy happiness? No one has given this question more thought than Gretchen, who spent an entire year of her life contemplating the nature of happiness. In her book, The Happiness Project, Gretchen chronicles the year she spent test-driving every principle, tip, theory, and scientific study she could find, whether from Aristotle or St. Thérèse, Martin Seligman or Oprah. On her blog and in her books, she explains these rules for living and reports on what works and what doesn't in a series of profound and fascinating articles that will blow you away.

Ramit Sethi

(iwillteachyoutoberich.com)—One of the first personal finance bloggers to become a media superstar, Ramit Sethi's updated bestselling book, I Will Teach You to Be Rich, offers 20- to 35-year-olds a completely practical approach to personal finance delivered with a nonjudgmental style. Smart, witty, and completely approachable, Ramit is considered by many as one of the best financial voices of his generation.

Carolyn Wilman

(contestqueen.com)—Canada's self-proclaimed Contest Queen, Carolyn's Online Contesting System has helped people win over $1,000,000 in cash and prizes. Her self-published book, You Can't Win If You Don't Enter, is the first Internet-focused contest resource book in Canada, and includes time saving tips and tools of the trade that is indispensable for any would-be contest queen (or king).

BEST PERSONAL FINANCE BLOGS*Bargain Babe

(bargainbabe.com)—What do you get when you combine an mom and an obsessive bargain hunter? The most informative and dogged saver, of course! Mara covers everything from decluttering to tree-cleaning products, and much more.

Colin Beavan

(colinbeavan.com)—Colin Beavan's No Impact Man project and book chronicled his daring experiment of getting his family to live in the heart of New York City for one year without causing any net environmental impact. In other words: no electricity, cars, or even toilet paper! It is an incredible story that will keep you entertained and inspired to make a few green choices in your own life.

Consumerism Commentary

(consumerismcommentary.com)—This informative group blog was honored by Kiplinger as a "must-read" blog and named as one of Yahoo!'s "Ten Money Blogs Everyone Should Read." Luke Landes created Consumerism Commentary in 2003 to hold himself accountable for his finances: "My plan was to regularly publish my account balances and spending information so I could publicly track them over time and perhaps gain support from readers."

Consumerist

(consumerist.com)—No longer offering new content (since 2017), the site still allows you to browse its archives. Consumerist empowers consumers to fight back by informing them about the top consumer issues. Managing Editor Ben Popken and his crack team of reporters have exposed countless corporate scams. These guys were not afraid to jump into the fray to browbeat and ridicule corporations until they made things right for the little guys. This was one of the few websites I checked several times a day, and its great content usually left me pumping my fist in the air or laughing my head off.

Dumb Little Man

(dumblittleman.com)—There's nothing dumb or exclusively male about Jay White's ultra-helpful online productivity magazine. Possibly the best-named blog in the world, Jay's success is the result of his merciless focus on his core mission: to provide you with tips that will save you money, increase your productivity, or simply keep you sane. And boy, does he deliver. There are no filler posts or political grandstanding. Just all great tips, all the time.

Finance for a Freelance Life

(financefreelancelife.com)—Mrs. Micah is the unofficial welcome wagon of the personal finance blogosphere. Generous with her praise