

and good humor, Mrs. Micah leaves a positive impact on every blog or forum she visits.

FiveCentNickel

(fivecentnickel.com)—Written by a man who has been meticulously recording his finances since 1997 (stored in Quicken), FiveCentNickel is one of the oldest and most respected blogs around. This blog often provides great commentary on—and summaries of—useful financial tips featured by other publications. If you're too lazy to read every little money article out there, just stop by FiveCentNickel and get the cream of the crop.

Free Money Finance

(freemoneyfinance.com)—This blog has one of the best background stories ever: "Through the years, I've done the things I've talked about here at Free Money Finance—spent less than I've earned, paid off all my debt, managed my career, invested regularly and the like. During that time, my net worth has grown and grown, allowing my family to be in the upper percentages of wealth in the U.S. I'm not writing about topics I've read about one time and regurgitated with opinions based on nothing—I have lived these topics, applied these principles, and know what works and what doesn't." Can you resist following this blog after reading that description?

Get Rich Slowly

(getrichslowly.org)—Named most inspiring money blog by Money magazine, J. D. Roth's Get Rich Slowly is by far one of the best personal finance blogs we've ever read. True to its name, this blog provides detailed and methodical step-by-step guides to every personal finance problem you face in your life. When J. D. reviews a product or service, it is usually the most comprehensive and helpful review you'll find anywhere.

Lazy Man and Money

(lazymanandmoney.com)—If you're a fan of getting the maximum return for a minimum amount of effort, this is the blog for you. While targeted at lazy people (we prefer "motivationally challenged," thank you), the blogger himself is anything but lazy. His writing is crisp and his advice superb.

Lifehack

(lifehack.org)—The list of Lifehack's writers is a virtual who's who of the best productivity bloggers in the world. Almost every popular blogger has featured an article or two on this great blog. Of course, I'm especially partial to articles by Thursday Bram and Torley Wong, who also write for Wise Bread.

Lifehacker

(lifehacker.com)—Simply the best productivity blog. Period. This award-winning blog features tips, hacks, and news that help you get things done smarter and more efficiently. While Lifehacker has a slight tech slant, it provides incredible tips from all over the web on almost every topic. If there's a great tip out there about how to simplify your life, you'll find it on Lifehacker. I love how the amazing writers of Lifehacker always give their tips in plain English without any unnecessary tech babble. This is truly a productivity blog anyone can benefit from.

Mighty Bargain Hunter

(mightybargainhunter.com)—Written by a father in his early forties with a wonderful wife and a beautiful daughter, the Mighty Bargain Hunter provides solid tips about saving money and finding deals. He analyzes complex financial deals in layman's terms and often brings a fresh perspective that other experts fail to consider.

My Money Blog

(mymoneyblog.com)—Named by Money magazine as the most voyeuristic financial blog, My Money Blog is written by a 40-something-year-old IT engineer who is brutally honest about his financial successes and failures. One of the most analytical and informative blogs, My Money Blog is where I go for the most technically sound personal finance tips.

No Credit Needed

(ncnblog.com)—Covers topics including debt reduction, charity, home maintenance, and more.

Unclutterer

(unclutterer.com)—Unclutterer is a godsend for anyone who desperately needs more organization,