
5. Cure your lawn of brown spots

I talked to a gardener who assured me that the acids in the beer help kill off bugs and the other ingredients promote green growth.

6. Ease a stomachache

The carbonation in the beer can help ease your nasty tummy rumbles. Of course, this is not a good one for children, or people with an ulcer or other serious stomach illness.

7. Remove stains

Something nasty on your carpet? Maybe a red wine stain? Well, a light beer will help pull that stain out. Sometimes a little club soda first will also help. Then use a regular carpet steam cleaner after to lift out the liquid and the smell.

8. Make a killer meat-tenderizing marinade

I have used soda in the past to help soften a steak before putting it on the grill, but that was too sweet for me. Now, I use a good beer or lager, and sometimes a stout if I'm feeling the need for some hearty flavor. The beer will really help soften the meat, add a distinctive taste, and it's way better than those chemical tenderizers.

9. Revive wooden furniture

Got a few opened, half-empty beers from a party? Well, flat beer makes a great wood reviver. Just dampen a microfiber cloth with your flat beer, then rub gently into your furniture. It will give it a polish and bring back some color.

10. Highlight your hair

Give your lovely locks that sun-kissed glow. Soak your hair in beer and then lay in the sun. It will pull out terrific highlights and make you smell deliciously hoppy! (Alternately, wash the beer out if you'd rather smell like a normal person.) Beer is also a handy hair conditioner.

11. Polish gold jewelry

Don't bother buying expensive store-bought cleaners. Drop your rings and other trinkets into a dish of beer,
