

then remove and polish to a beautiful sheen using a dry cloth.

12. Attract bees

I really don't like bees and wasps, especially at barbecues and get-togethers in the park or backyard. So, an hour before the event is due to kick off, place some small containers of beer around the perimeter of the yard. The sugar and smell will attract the bees and keep them away from your party.

13. Beer batter

I'm English; I love my fish 'n' chips. Replace the liquid in your favorite battered fish recipe with beer to make a memorable dish.

- 1 12 oz. bottle of beer
- 1 cup all-purpose flour
- 2 tablespoons paprika
- 2 teaspoons salt
- 2 teaspoons ground black pepper
- 1 egg, beaten

14. Heal

As some of you may know, beer is a diuretic. And therefore, it can be used to help pass a kidney stone. It cannot, however, be used like other diuretics—to treat liver cirrhosis (for obvious reasons).

15. Liven up some bland shrimp or lobster

Well, okay, lobster usually isn't that bland. But shrimp can certainly lack "oomph" on occasion, and flat beer can help. Simply boil it up with some spices, like turmeric, Cajun seasoning, a bay leaf, salt, pepper, and a touch of cayenne pepper. Then, add your raw shrimp and cook for around 5 minutes (15 for lobster). Serve with rice and steamed vegetables.

16. Make beersicles

Get yourself a Popsicle maker from your local grocery store and instead of adding fruit juice, add a selection of different beers. An Indian pale ale, a lager, a bitter, a stout, and so on. You'll have a set of tasty adult treats for a hot summer day. You can also make smaller versions using an ice cube tray and toothpicks.

17. Start a conversation

By carefully spilling a little beer on the attractive person next to you, male or female, you give yourself an opening
