5. Hotel shuttle service

Apparently, many hotels have shuttle service to various large tourist attractions as well. Got an entire family? Even a generous tip to the shuttle driver is way cheaper than bus tickets for a family with four children. The Frugal Duchess has used this in a couple of different major cities and calculated that even the savings from traveling to one destination a day came out to around a $20 savings for her family. Doing a morning run, an afternoon activity, and heading out for dinner? This can rack up major bucks in a hurry. I know the next time I'm trying out a new city, I'll be trying this tip out for sure.

6. Creative use of airport shuttles

Hotels aren't the only ones with shuttle services. Now, going from airport to airport, or catching a shuttle from your door to the departure terminal might not be free, but it is way cheaper than a cab. A true story Sharon told me about a woman she met during her book promotional travels: The city this woman was flying into had two airports. One had a much cheaper airfare to travel to than the other, but was further away via ground transport than the other, which would apparently have affected the cost. So she took the airport-to-airport shuttle (which was in this case free), and then snagged the drive-you-to-your-door shuttle from the closer airport. Another example Sharon shared was a situation where catching two airport shuttle vans in a row with an airport in between can often get you where you want to go cheaper than flying or driving yourself. Bonus? You get dropped directly at your door. How cool is that?
