

a great deal if priced separately, but how long would it take me to use all of it? I've found the best way to save money at bulk co-op outlets and warehouse stores is to go halves with my mom. She buys pretty much the same stuff I do, and by splitting both, the cost of the warehouse club fee and divvying up the goods, we make out like bandits on items that rarely go on sale or don't offer much in the way of manufacturers' coupons. (Carpooling also saves us gas money and makes for a fun afternoon!)

6. Dispense with care

Many of the products we use every day are packaged poorly. They are designed to allow a large amount of product to come out at a time, increasing your usage and forcing you to buy more often. If you only need a "dime-sized" helping of shampoo, why does a "half-dollar" come oozing out? One way to save money is by changing your usage habits. We do this at home in several ways. My favorite is to buy some inexpensive foaming hand pumps for products like face wash. A nifty toothpaste tube flattener helps us use every bit of paste, and keeps the kids from trashing the sink. Storing bottles upside down in the shower lets us get two or three more days from most items.

Saving money doesn't have to be a hardship. I've never been one to ask families to make their own beauty products for the sake of frugality (although it can be a fun hobby!). I also despise generic beauty products and don't believe in watering down the goods. It is possible to stick to your favorites and save at the same time! — Linsey Knerl

5 Cheap and Simple Sunburn Remedies That Really Work

Oops, I did it again. Thinking that just one unprotected hour in the sun would be all right, I fried my fair Danish skin. I really know better, but it can happen to the best of us. Sunburn isn't just a painful nuisance—it can wreak havoc on healthy skin and put you at risk for getting skin cancer later in life. (In fact, one or more severe sunburns before age 20 greatly increase the chances. While the best treatment
