

liquid that you dissolve in water. My recommendation is to go with the pills, as they often taste much better than the liquid. You may have to try several brands to find one that works, but it's worth it if keeping chemicals out of your body is important to you. They're not as strong as traditional decongestants so they don't always work, but have saved my days more than once.

9. Drink lots of water. Sounds cheesy, but it's true. The more you drink, the looser your mucus will be as there's more water in your body for it to mix with. In addition, if you drink a lot of water, your sinuses will be more likely to be moist, which means they'll function better.
10. Walk up stairs. Repeat. There's something about the position your body is in when you're walking up stairs that is conducive to draining sinuses and nasal passages (body slightly tilted forward, head up). I'll do this in the middle of the night when I wake up because I can't breathe and it's too close to time to get up for me to take more medicine. It has never failed to drain my sinuses and help me get back to sleep. —

7 Beauty Secrets That Cost Almost Nothing

Open the pages of almost any magazine, or turn on the TV, and you're bombarded with ads that claim (if indirectly) that their beauty products will make your life fuller, more rewarding, and all-around better. The message is pretty simple: Spend, and you'll look so much better.

There are, however, a few beauty methods that are nearly guaranteed to make you look and feel like a million bucks, and you don't have to smash your piggy bank to get them. It's tired to talk about how beauty comes from within, so rather than worrying about the purity of your soul, here are a few ways to bring out an inner glow that doesn't involve liposuction or deep contemplation.

1. Have safe sex

There's something about regular sex that makes people beautiful. I don't know if teenagers still talk about this stuff today, but back in my high school
