

DAY 14: SAVE ON INTERNET SERVICES

While one might consider cable an unnecessary cost, the internet is a completely different story. It makes the world go ‘round. We can surf websites, read the news, pay our bills, connect with friends and family on social media, and even order pizza. The internet has come a long way since the first introduction of the World Wide Web, and I, for one, am super thankful for its existence. Without it, I’d be out of a job rather quickly!

The addition of internet access on our phones only increases our dependence. Don’t even get me started on the hundreds of available apps either. It seems anything and everything needs the internet to help it run, making this amenity extremely hard—no, impossible—to imagine living without.

We personally pay for our internet as a separate bill since we don’t have a cable package to bundle it with, but still, we try to be pretty judicious with the cost. This might mean things like sacrificing speed or quality, but at the end of the day, we’re almost always able to access exactly what we need to.

Plus, with the presence of free Wi-Fi in a variety of public places, I can always pop into the local library, coffee shop, or hotel parking lot if I need a change of scenery. That, or when the power goes out from one of our infamous Florida thunderstorms!

Whether you pay for internet in a bundled package or as a separate bill like ours, here are five ideas to help you slash costs while still enjoying all the luxuries this amazing technology has to offer:

1. KNOW YOUR TERMS

I’m not super technical, so when I think of the internet, I think of it as one service that comes from one piece of equipment—the computer. This isn’t so. In fact, I had to ask Joseph a whole bunch of questions again to figure out how all this internet stuff worked. Even though a lesson in definitions might not seem relevant to saving money, trust me, it is. You need to be
